Choosing which type of beer to have, will depend on when you will be collecting and then drinking your beer.

Rough Beer: This is exactly the same as we serve from our cellar and will need a little time and attention before you can drink it. It will however give you great beer for 5 to 10 days after opening; and if kept correctly can be stored for up to 6 weeks before opening.

Bright Beer: This is exactly as if we had poured it on our bar so has been cleared for you. You can drink this as soon as you get it home so does not need any setting period. As this beer is 'ready to drink' it does not keep as long as Rough Beer, but will still last for up to 5 days providing it has been kept at the right temperature.

Storage: To enjoy your beer at it's best you will need to store it in a suitable location where it's temperature will be kept at approximately 12 degrees Celsius. Too warm and will affect the taste of the beer, and too cold will make the beer go flat and hazy. So avoid frosts at this time of year. Your beer needs to be stored upright with the tap tear out panel at the top.

Releasing pressure: Whilst your beer is being stored, you must release any gas pressures if the bag becomes inflated. This is simple done by opening the tap whilst the box is upright.

Preparing Rough Beer: 24 Hours before you can enjoy your beer, you will need to position and tilt the box where it will be kept until finished. your beer can't be moved again as you will disturb the sediment.
